

August 14, 2004

Bike of the Day

Hello to all,

Tokyo has about 10 million people.

It seems like at least 3 million of them are young people on scooters and motorcycles.

From all appearances, at least 1 million of those are constantly trying to make it down the streets of Ginza simultaneously.

So, as you can imagine, it's a fun place to people- and bike-watch, especially on Saturday night.

Of all of the thousands of bikes and scooters we've seen over the last few days, this one stood out.

It is the winner of the Bike of the Day award for Saturday, August 14, 2004.

Be well,
Doug

A Honda Zoomer, the naked hooligan bike of the Japanese Scooter world. Very nicely accessorized, it featured a snake skin helmet wrap and tasteful additions to stock livery.

Bike of the Day

The Yosh pipe, which I imagine raises output by at least .015 horsepower. Note the nifty cargo net wrapped storage space under the seat.

Massive meats topped by trendy clear signals.

Bike of the Day

Snazzy gimbal mounted billet mirrors and City Jungle grips.

And don't even think about making off with this beauty.